Talk A CONVERSATION WITH BILL FRENCH

"We've figured out that two guys can get more done together than working separate. We can run through a 24-pump gas station in pretty good shape."

Bill French, 62, serves as the official Sealer of Weights and Measures for Cape Elizabeth and South Portland. With the help of a part-time assistant, French checks gas pumps, scales and measuring tapes to ensure they are calibrated properly so customers receive a fair deal. He was a state weights and measures inspector until his retirement in 1996.

How often do you catch people with dishonest scales?

Very seldom. Sometimes when I worked for the state and we'd go in and find them all on the low side, and you suspect, but you just adjust 'em a little bit and you don't say anything.

The only time I went to court was on a firewood complaint about, oh, nine, 10 years ago. We had a lot of problems with firewood dealers trying to deliver less than what they were supposed to. There's a difference between a thrown cord and a stacked cord, and there's a slight difference between whether it's chucked or loaded from a conveyor belt, or whether it's loaded with a bucket loader.

Were the suspects using thrown cords?

Well, I don't know what they were using, but they were shortin' their customers. [The state] did put 'em out of business, then they got back into business and got into more trouble and I don't know if they're still doing it or not. I haven't heard about 'em for years. There's probably still people doin' that today — people just don't realize it.

Do you do metrics, too?

There are some metric gas pumps around, not many, but they read in liters. There used to be one over in Lewiston at a little station, but I think that's been long gone. There is one or two left, but I'm not sure where they are. Not in the area I work now. They're in French-speaking towns like Lewiston. They can understand liters better than gallons.

Do you think they'll ever change over to the metric system here?

Probably someday, but I don't wanna see it. My head works in inches.

Do you have to check the octane levels of the pumps, too?

We can check octane. The state has a little handheld thing, which you pour gas into a cup and you set it in there and it shines light through it and checks the octane somehow that way.

Have you ever seen a case of somebody shying the octane?

Yep. I wouldn't wanna say who, but there is a — there was a crook, not too far away from here, not in this town, but within 50 miles.

You guys put him out of business?

He sold out. We caused him quite a bit of grief. We could never really pin it on him, but we caused enough grief that he saw the handwriting on the wall.

Another state of mind

Former Democratic state Rep. Annette Hoglund of Portland is nothing if not flexible. Particularly when it comes to political donations.

The latest example of Hoglund's pliable positions showed up in the Maine Sunday Telegram on June 28, in a story explaining why her campaign committee's license to run bingo games had been revoked — thereby cutting off a source that had generated $1.4 million over the past two years. The newspaper reported, "The state says too much of the bingo money was used for other purposes [than running for office] to justify allowing the Hoglund campaign to keep its bingo license."

State records show Hoglund spent about $17,000 on her last bid for the Legislature in 1996. The rest of the cash went for prizes for bingo players, rent to the bingo hall (which is owned in part by Hoglund and her family) and donations to charity.

According to the Telegram, "Hoglund says her charitable contributions are campaign expenses because they build support for her as a future candidate. She says she campaigns at the bingo games by mixing with voters, so the bingo games also are campaign activities."

That's different from what Hoglund was claiming last year. Back then, she insisted the games had nothing to do with politics. She argued she didn't have to report the total amount raised on her state campaign finance forms, because only the profits were actual political contributions. "Those people [bingo players] aren't giving the money to me personally," Hoglund told me in March 1997. "They're giving it to the bingo hall."

(The state ethics commission disagreed. In March 1998, commissioners fined her $2,500 for failing to report more than a million bucks in donations.)

A Casco Bay Weekly reporter visited a Hoglund fund-raiser in April 1997. "What's notably missing at [the bingo hall] is fanfare over Annette Hoglund herself. Though her campaign efforts would presumably benefit from enhanced voter familiarity, nothing in the hall's advertising mentions her name, and games there have all the political fervor of a day spent packing frozen haddock."

Hoglund's lawyer, Bill Cote, claimed the lack of campaign activity made sense. "When someone goes to play bingo," Cote told me in December 1997, "they're not going to influence the outcome of an election. They're going to win prizes."

So which is it? If the games are political — as the elastic Hoglund now asserts — how does she justify her failure to report a million dollars in campaign contributions? If bingo is strictly for entertainment — her previous malleable position — how can Hoglund dispute the decision to yank her license?

(For the record, Hoglund filed notice in February that she intends to sue me for repeatedly mentioning this stuff, and naturally, I'm scared to death.)

A long way home

Those seeking Republican gubernatorial candidate Jim Longley have learned to look in almost any state but Maine. For instance, with about a week to go before the June 9 primary, Longley was visiting California.

"Don't be too quick to draw any conclusions or assumptions about my campaign because of my trip," he e-mailed the Portland Press Herald. "I am attending an important defense conference and had no control over the scheduling."

Defense conference? Is Longley planning to follow in the footsteps of the late New Hampshire Gov. Meldrim Thomson, and attempt to equip the National Guard with nuclear weapons? Actually, Longley works for a defense contractor, Computer Systems Technology. The conference, it seems, had more to do with his day job — which is located in yet another state, Alabama — than his hobby of running for office in Maine.

But there's no similar explanation for Longley's decision to spend June 27 delivering the keynote address to a conference sponsored by a property rights group in Vermont. There he shared the stage with representatives of several groups opposed to environmental laws, including the Pacific Legal Foundation and the Independent Forest Products Association.

The trip wasn't a total waste of campaign time, though. Also on the program was Mary Adams, paper industry supporter, anti-tax activist and that rarest of audiences for a Longley speech: a registered Maine voter.

Shooting straight in the dark

"Once again the progressives have assembled the firing squad in a circle," Herb Adams told the Portland Press Herald after losing his bid to regain his old legislative seat in Portland in the June 9 Democratic primary. "When we're done picking off our allies, maybe someday we'll go after our enemies."

Adams' criticism of his fellow liberals for failing to support him would have carried more moral authority if he hadn't been the first to fire a shot. It was, after all, Adams who decided to challenge incumbent state Rep. Michael Quint in that primary. Any wounds Adams suffered in the ensuing battle should certainly be classified as self-inflicted.

Cross Ideal Cut - The world's most beautiful Diamond.

Why You Should Buy Your Diamond Engagement Ring From Cross Jewelers

Cross, as Portland's oldest family-owned jewelry store, has a tradition of excellence which spans four generations. The philosophy which guides our store is that all jewelry must be made from the best precious metals, designed for beauty, designed to last, set with the finest gems and accurately represented. Our philosophy and commitment to excellence is your greatest assurance that anything you buy from Cross will represent true value and provide maximum satisfaction. The benefits of buying your diamond at Cross include:

Ideal Cutting: Ideal Cutting is simply the most beautiful way to cut a diamond. Only one out of every thousand diamonds cut in the world today achieves the exacting standards of the Cross Ideal Cut diamond. Your choice of a Cross Ideal Cut diamond gives you the optimal combination of brilliance, dispersion (rainbow colors) and scintillation (sparkle), a lifetime of extraordinary beauty.

Diamond Hallmark: All of Cross' Ultimate Ideal Cut diamonds come with a unique form of identification: a laser-inscribed registry number on the girdle (outside edge) of the gem, which positively identifies the diamond and authenticates your ownership. This registry number, called a hallmark is just 4 microns (4-ten thousandths of an inch) high, and is visible only under magnification. Registered to the new owner in the permanent records of Cross Jewelers, the quality grades (cut, color and clarity), as well as the carat weight are also listed in an international diamond registry in New York City. Only Cross' Ultimate Ideal Cut diamonds offer this additional guarantee of quality.

Finest Diamond Mounting: A Cross Diamond solitaire mounting starts with the part which holds the diamond, called the head. Forged from a single block of 18K white gold alloyed with platinum, the head goes through 12 individual die strikings, using 55 tons of pressure in each step. The result is the strongest, most durable head ever made. The part of the ring which encircles the finger is called the shank, and is crafted from two rectangular blocks of 18K yellow gold. Like the head, the shank sections go through multiple die-strikings. The 55 tons of pressure squeeze out all the air bubbles, densely compacting the atoms of gold. After the head and shank sections are assembled, the ring mounting is ready for finishing. The die striking results in a ring which accepts an extraordinarily high polish, for a beautiful ring which will hold Cross' most beautiful diamonds.

Cross' Diamond Lab: One of the values of buying your diamond from Cross Jewelers is the assurance that your diamond has been weighed, and the quality grading checked and verified by a registered jeweler. By acquiring our diamonds loose, we can guarantee the quality represented is exactly correct. Each Cross Ideal Cut diamond has been hand selected from hundreds, to provide the very best quality and value.

Cross' Diamond Setting Shop: Cross' Diamond Setting Shop is staffed by America's finest diamond setters, and is visible from our show room. The first rule of our diamond setting shop is, "take whatever amount of time is necessary to set the diamond most securely and most beautifully." Few people realize that, at the moment a properly weighted prong is pushed over the edge of a diamond, over 45 pounds of pressure is exerted on the diamond. Careful preparations are required to ensure that the precious metal on which the diamond rests is perfectly smooth, and properly supports the diamond. Because of their value, diamonds are never set "while you wait" at Cross Jewelers. Any time pressure on a diamond setter increases the risk to the diamond. For the safety of your diamond, setting in our shop is always scheduled within a block of time, allowing maximum time for all preparation details. The safety and security of your diamond depends on the quality of the mounting, the philosophy of the diamond setting shop, and most importantly, the skills and attention to detail by the diamond setter. If you would like to learn more about diamond setting, ask for a copy of our "Quality of Stone Setting" guide, written by Cross Jewelers.

Cross Diamond Prices are Real: For over three quarters of a century, Cross Jewelers has maintained a consistent, conservative pricing philosophy that allows you to shop with the "real price" on every piece of jewelry in our store. Items are priced according to their true value - we never have sales or offer discounts, because prices are not inflated to allow for these types of artificial sales techniques. We find that people enjoy shopping in a store where quality is accurately represented and the values are real - 365 days of the year. When non-ideal cut discount and sale diamonds are accurately graded for cut, color and clarity and accurately weighed for their carat weight, their "savings" often not only vanish when compared to an Ideal Cut diamond, but may be priced at a premium over the Ideal Cut.

My lunch with destiny

A relatively new friend and I had lunch the other day.

Nothing out of the ordinary about lunch with a friend. People do it all the time. Except this friend happens to be a very conservative Christian fundamentalist. How conservative? Let's just say her right-wing views would make our own dull-bulb Republican poster boy Jim Longley look like the front man for an Angela Davis for President campaign.

I really wanted to like my new friend, because she is everything I'm not. She'll argue bitterly with me one minute and then move on, with no hard feelings, the next. We would debate, and on rare occasions, much to our surprise, find we shared common ground. We respected each others' differences and got past them. That is, until this lunch.

While we munched away, I decided to confirm what I had sensed early on might be one of her worst fears. She started filling up the space between us with stories about her family, and her everyday life with her husband. I waited patiently. When the conversation began to spin in my direction, I took the opportunity to weave in details about my girlfriend. I could tell by the look in her eyes what had been a very polite discussion had just taken a dive into waters so deep I wasn't sure she would be able to surface with our friendship still intact.

She had befriended the enemy: a HOMOSEXUAL.

Voices from the people at tables around us grew louder as we sat there in awkward silence. Disappointment washed over her face and I realized just how much my honesty was about to change everything.

With difficulty, she swallowed the bite of pickle-and-ham sandwich she'd been working on. Keeping her eyes from mine, she said she suspected I might be HOMOSEXUAL, but since she had never known anyone like that, she hadn't wanted to insult me by assuming it. What fingernails I had, I dug deeper into the underside of my chair. She was a friend. I focused on my breathing and was almost calm when she started talking about my "choice" of "lifestyle." It was then I felt the vein on my forehead develop a pulse all its own.

How, she asked, had I come to such an obviously misguided choice? What had caused such emotional scarring? Had my parents not had a good relationship? Had my experiences with men been so bad I had turned in desperation towards women? What was my mother like? Didn't I know spending eternity in heaven would, as long as I continued along this path, be out of the question?

My emotions took off the gloves, but had second thoughts as they envisioned the incriminating prints from my hands clamped tightly around her chauvinistic throat. And my brain kept whispering, "Talk to her. She respects you, she'll listen to reason." Against my better judgment, I deferred to my brain. What a mistake.

For my brain had formed what it thought was quite a logical argument: Sexual orientation is not a "choice" like choosing an ice cream flavor. And it isn't an adopted "lifestyle" like being a Christian is. It's like being born with brown skin or blue eyes.

Orientation, even with the right amount of Bible thumping or electroshock therapy, is something you can't change.

My parents, whom I love dearly, are straight and still together. As for men? I love them. Talk to straight women if you want to be frightened — their stories about men will make your neck hairs stand on end.

With argument in place, I was ready to speak. She, however, would not listen. Proselytizing on automatic pilot, she talked over and around me. There was still time, she said, to ask her savior for directions back to Straightville. I knew where she was going.

She said I should come to her church. If I played my cards right I could go from homo to hetero in a few easy steps. There was her pastor and perhaps even a counselor who could "cure" me and teach me how to stuff my lesbian desire into a nice little skirt-wearing-subservient-man-workshipping package complete with pink bow atop perfectly coiffed hair.

She continued to drone on and I realized I would never win. Fact and reason were not accepted in her world. I sat there pretending to listen while visions of greatness rode through my head like a special-edition Harley. I saw myself as the Clarence Darrow of the new millennium. Only this time I was arguing a case that would allow for more than one recognized form of orientation. I was brilliant.

I don't think I have to tell you who won. When she stopped to take a breath, I smiled, reached for an M&M and changed the subject.

For those looking to obtain a complete sexual orientation makeover kit or directions to that hetero vacation spot, Straightville, Pacillo regrets to inform you that both are works of fiction, and at this time are unavailable to the intelligent consumer.

You're probably wondering about the inside scoop on the failure of former U.S. Senate candidate John Hathaway's bid to buy the Portland Pirates hockey team. Hathaway, who's reportedly worth millions, surprised everybody on July 1 by failing to meet the deadline for completing the sale. Speculation arose that the deal collapsed

news-o-rama

after Kenneth Starr began investigating its ties to Whitewater. Rumors floated that Hathaway insisted on paying in devalued Japanese yen. Eyewitnesses claimed United Nations peacekeepers surrounded the Cumberland County Civic Center just before the agreement went south.

The truth, of course, is much weirder. While Hathaway claimed the sale was too complicated to be completed in four months, the real story has to do with his plans to use the franchise as leverage in a deal to build a new arena in Greater Portland. According to the Biddeford Journal Tribune, Hathaway was working with Mentmore Holdings, a New York company that has an agreement with the National Hockey League to develop youth hockey rinks nationwide. One of those rinks was to be in York County. But that facility — estimated to cost $18 million — was just a sideline. Mentmore's real aim was to obtain the contract to build a new civic center in Portland, a project that would cost at least $50 million. Meanwhile, Hathaway saw his purchase of the team and involvement in a new civic center as helping to rebuild his political career, damaged in 1996 when allegations surfaced that he had sexually abused a young girl in Alabama.

The Hathaway-Mentmore plan went sour when the estate of the late philanthropist Betty Noyce announced it was willing to donate land and money to build a new civic center. Mentmore, figuring it couldn't compete with that low-cost alternative, lost interest in both the Pirates and the York County ice rink. Hathaway claims he's still interested in buying the team, but the Pirates' owners say they've got other potential purchasers on the line. And the nonprofit group seeking to build the York County facility has shoved Hathaway aside, and is pursuing its own course. Cancel that order for "Hathaway for Governor in 2002" bumper stickers.

Blocking roadblocks

Portland police don't apply for grant money for drunk-driving enforcement because there are too few cops to staff the program

■ KIMBERLY JEAN SMITH

Portland police lost an opportunity to receive thousands in grant money to help enforce drunk-driving laws because the department says it doesn't have enough officers to work the extra shifts the program would have required.

Mike Chitwood, Portland's chief of police, said he had a hard time finding officers last year who were willing to staff the roadblocks. Even though Portland police received $25,000 last year from the Maine Department of Public Safety, Chitwood opted not to apply again this year for the grant program funding roadblocks and other drunk-driving enforcement. Chitwood said his officers wouldn't work the overtime needed to staff them.

That's because of the way shifts are organized and a shortage of officers in the department, said Jim Sweatt, president of the officer's union. "The union really supports making [drunk driving] arrests," Sweatt said, adding that roadblocks, which the grant would have funded, are very useful. "I think over the years, all the grants and all the actual arrests have significantly reduced" it. But with the city down as many as 15 officers as recently as last month, few people would have been free to work the typical 9 p.m. to 2 a.m. roadblock shift, he said.

Indeed, Portland police have been losing about one officer per month over the last two years, said Clarkson Woodward, who looks for replacements as the department's human resource manager. Portland's department just hired six new officers fresh from the state police academy, but they won't complete the department's in-house training process for months. When fully staffed, Portland's department has 151 officers. As of last month, the department was about 10 percent short of that goal. Woodward said that there are also many officers who are just reaching retirement age, so more resignations wouldn't surprise her.

Maine's strong economy means there are more jobs open outside the force. A retired officer can take one of those while still collecting retirement benefits. "When there's a good economy," said Deputy Chief Mark Dion, "there's a higher likelihood that more officers will retire." Dion said the department's staffing problems have also been exacerbated by cuts at the state level that have reduced classes at the police academy, leaving fewer slots for training new officers. By this fall, the city could end up with qualified candidates, he said, and no place to send them for training. "You know, people read in the paper that the state is saving money" he said. "Well, there are consequences to that."

Even with a short-staffed department, Portland police have been making drunk-driving arrests. Over the last four or five years, the department has nabbed an average of 457 people a year for the crime. Last year, it arrested 629. Dion said he wished the department could still run the roadblock program — not so much because of the number of arrests officers made — which only amounted to three or four per shift — but because they allowed police to have positive interactions with the hundreds of sober people who just happen to be driving through.

Edward Googins, chief of the South Portland police, said he sympathizes with Portland's staffing problems. He too has been short-staffed. But Googins went ahead and applied for the state grant, because he thinks the program was too important to let go. South Portland was among 55 departments statewide that received the money. With the $10,000, Googins said he plans to set up unannounced roadblocks about once a month until the end of summer. "Staffing can be an issue," he said. "To safely run a roadblock, you need roughly 12 officers. If you can't do it safely, don't do it at all."

Phyllis McQuaide, who runs the Casco Bay chapter of Mothers Against Drunk Driving, said she was disappointed by Chitwood's decision. "I'm one for preventative medicine," said McQuaide. "I think [roadblocks] will prevent some people who may have been thinking about having some drinks from getting back into a car." Portland has a lot of bars, she pointed out, and people often drive from out of town to reach them.

Zootz

More complaints

Nightclub still too loud?

A battle that's pitted elderly residents of a downtown apartment building against the patrons of a nearby nightclub is heating up again, with threats on one side and frustration on the other.

Eleanor Johnson, who lives in the 10 Congress Square complex — a home for elderly, physically and mentally disabled people — said neighbors with apartments facing Zootz on Forest Avenue can't stand the club's ruckus anymore. In March, she wrote a letter on their behalf, threatening to smash the club's front door with an electric iron. But George Sweeting, Zootz' owner, said he's done all he can to ease the situation, spending about $10,000 for extra policing, putting in an extra phone line to receive noise complaints and changing the way people enter and exit the club. "If it was me venting, complaining and saying I was going to throw an iron through their window," Sweeting said, "I'd be arrested."

The battle over Zootz has been waged for about a decade, Sweeting said, long before he bought the club three years ago. Since his purchase, he's had to defend Zootz' license repeatedly at Portland City Hall and promise to keep the club's noise levels down or lose his right to operate in the current location.

Until recently, it looked like Sweeting's efforts were succeeding. But in spring, Johnson's letter and a complaint to police made by several other Congress Square residents caught Sweeting and city officials off-guard. City Councilor George Campbell, whose district includes downtown, said he hopes the dispute will be resolved soon, or Zootz could be forced to close. The club's license is up for renewal in August.

Sweeting said he is growing weary of the battle to keep the club alive. "If I have to go through another big fight," he said, "then I have to seriously assess the situation." Closing the club is no longer unthinkable, he said.

Johnson said she'd be happy to see Sweeting throw in the towel and shutter Zootz. Noise from the club keeps old people up at night, leading to anxiety and health problems, said Johnson, who worked as a nurse before retiring. That's more important than somebody else's good time, she said. "I don't deny that I was 17 once, and I know it's fun to holler and hoot," Johnson said. But "either they should move, or we should."

Both sides will meet on July 9 at 2 p.m. at the Congress Square complex, as part of a series of discussions the city set up between residents, politicians, the police and club owners to help resolve the dispute.

Determined to find what's bubbling beneath the surface of Portland's music scene — under the din of perennial crowd-drawers like Motor Booty Affair, Petting Zoo and Lazy Lightning — we picked the brains of local club owners, booking agents, music store staffers and others in the know. Some came up blank, but others cited a bevy of bands who've been plugging along without much recognition: Anti-Friend Hut, Velvis, Commander Waldron and the Chocolate Mess, Buck Grunt, PCP, Rare Form, Bloom.

We also found that some things don't change. Guitar rock bands still dominate local clubs and bars. The Electric Tigers are perhaps the best of the new generation of such rockers. But there's a growing audience for other kinds of music. Go Button plays with the nutty energy of a band that doesn't fit into the guitar-rock mold — and doesn't want to — while DJs Seanne London, Marc Shepard and Nick Edwards offer fresh dance music for those Portlanders willing to stretch their legs. New traditions in the making? We think so.

Go Button
sets its coordinates
for alien territory

■ ALLEN DAMMANN

If it ever came time for Go Button to clamber up on stage and make one of those liquor-sopped, hallelujah acceptance speeches for an MTV award, at least co-frontman, song writer and founding member Peter Wool would keep it short. There's only one person to thank: his mother. It was on a visit to her house seven years ago that the freelance typesetter picked up a long-neglected childhood guitar, a seminal reunion between man and instrument that convinced the New York native of one immutable truth — he was a freelance typesetter.

But no matter. The watershed moment came just a few seconds later, when Wool's girlfriend, Karyn Jenkins — another musically bent freelance typesetter and a lapsed cellist who functions as the group's bass guitarist — told him to go on playing anyway. He did. And so, born of the untutored string-plucking of "He Has The Whole World In His Hands," Go Button took its first wobbly steps toward creating a sound that Jenkins describes as "too normal to be weird, too weird to be normal."

Later, the couple's neighbor taught Wool some of the bedrock classics that all great bands, in some form or another, are indebted to — songs like "Peggy Sue," for one. That neighbor, Dave Peabody, is now the group's other lead singer and songwriter. Maybe "It's A Small World After All" would have been a more appropriate first song.

Now, after a merry-go-round's whirl of drummers and lead guitarists, the band includes Jason Stewart of Switchboard on skins ("I play with whoever's cool," he jokes) and Johnny Savage — whose vocal talents have earned him a second moniker, The Hollerin' Man — as head player on the cigar box.

Together, the five bespectacled members of Go Button, as young as 24 and as old as 44, steer down a dimly lit musical avenue, swerving between country on one shoulder and folk on the other, with road signs for rock 'n' roll along the way. But when it comes to slipping their material into an envelope that a reporter can lick, seal and deliver to his readers, the band can't decide how to package themselves. They bat around terms like "spy-fi" and "avant-garage" before arriving at a name they can agree on: foke. As in folk with a sense of humor. As in the kind of music you'd expect from a band that anchors an entire song around a toy piano, or that takes lyrical liberties with "King of the Road," or that creates ungodly bastards — like putting the words of Barry Manilow's "Mandy" to the music of America's "Horse With No Name."

It's the kind of music that makes three guys at the Free Street Taverna pause mid-quaff in their martinis, eyebrows raised in a "What the ... ?" kind of expression.

The band members have lugged their instruments to the Taverna for open mic night, an event the quintet returned to as a courtesy to this tabloid biographer. It's a throwback to Go Button's early days in more ways than one. The unpaid gig promises to deliver slightly less money than the group's first public outing, an appearance at a sports bar that earned the original members a whopping $15. Now, crowded onto Free Street's miniature stage, the band saws out a back-porch number called "Oh My Darling." Standing before a mic, his hands clasped boyishly behind his back, Peabody repeats the titular phrase in deep Appalachian tones that are as steady as the music is rousing. And when the mic fritzes out during Wool's turn on vocals, no problem. He just steps closer to the audience and turns up the volume on his windpipes.

"These guys are quirky," says Savage of the group, and the music. "I love it. I've always been attracted to original projects like this." When asked how far up the industry ladder the band is willing to go, the musicians answer in varying chords of muted ambition. It's not for a lack of desire. Rather, it's apparent even to an outsider that the band members' razzing friendship is — for the time being, at least — gratification enough. Leave gold records on the wall to Joe Walsh. These guys are content to make fun of their shared poor vision. "We're the myopic electric-folk quintet," says Jenkins.

After the band's brief performance at Free Street, one of the martini trio approaches Wool and expresses his enthusiasm. If Go Button's music complements lounge drinks as well as sports bar suds, maybe the band truly has veered off into musical terra incognita. But let's hope not. With a fan base that includes everyone from neo-swingers to baseball-capped kidney punchers, that acceptance speech could just keep getting longer and longer.

Go Button performs in Portland July 9 at The Bitter End, 446 Fore Street at 9 p.m.; July 16 at Silly's, 40 Washington Ave at 7 p.m.; and July 30 at the Free Street Taverna, 128 Free St at 10 p.m.

Eye of the tigers

The Electric Tigers want to save rock 'n' roll. All they need is an audience.

■ ZOE S. MILLER

The guys in the Electric Tigers are sitting on a couch in the Rec Room at Zootz, sipping cocktails and trying to explain their collective psyche. But with America's favorite incendiary TV host, Jerry Springer, blaring from the set in the corner, concentration is proving difficult.

The topic of tonight's Springer show is people who love their best friends, who happen to be happily involved with somebody else. Bassist Dan Adams admits to having once been caught in that sticky situation himself. "Not with these guys, though," Adams clarifies.

Adams, 23, and his bandmates have the mellow rapport of guys who spend a lot of time jamming together. The Electric Tigers includes 24-year-old guitarist and lead vocalist Rusty (who, in a professed effort to subvert the patriarchy, refused to give his last name) and drummer Stefen Samuels, 23. They've all been in bands since their school days, and have been playing together as the Electric Tigers for more than a year now.

They're getting good.

The Electric Tigers cite a number of bands as influences: Rusty likes the Pixies, Radiohead and the Blues Brothers. Radiohead is on Adams' list too, along with Built To Spill. Samuels, who confessed to having a mullet in the 8th grade, comes from a different angle. He was raised on Fugazi, Ozzy, Miles Davis and Diamond Dave-era Van Halen. "Metal will make a comeback," Samuels says. "I disagree," says Adams. "I think rock 'n' roll is dying."

So why be in a rock band? Adams says he's searching for new musical directions, and that Rusty and Samuels want to rock more than he does. "We just want to cut loose," Rusty agrees. "I respect dynamic range," says Samuels. "But I really like fast and loud."

Before the group got started, Rusty and Adams each envisioned himself as band leader. "I thought I was the leader. Dan was like, 'I'm the leader,'" says Rusty. "It's sorta like a compromise. He gives me a lot of shit." However they got this way, it works. The band's guitar-heavy pop songs meander through loud and soft terrain with an orchestral flourish. The sound conjures up comparisons to Radiohead, early Smashing Pumpkins and Pavement. Then there's Rusty's flat, Geddy Lee-esque voice, which adds a dimension of drama to the compositions.

Though Rusty writes most of the songs and Adams usually does the arranging, they sometimes switch roles. "Stefen plays drums 100 percent of the time," adds Adams. At shows, the three wear uniforms of white oxfords and khakis. Rusty explains this look was inspired by his stint at a Starbucks in New York City. "It's the coolest in temperature, most comfortable," says Rusty.

Not only do the band members dress alike, they live together, too. Adams and Rusty share an apartment, but the two say Samuels might as well be a third roommate, since according to them, he calls their house every hour.

Samuels is studying music at the University of Southern Maine, and in his spare time likes to make pizza and draw cartoon strips of people getting killed. Rusty has a day job at a woodworking studio and creates oil paintings that he says are "like if Picasso was a skater." Adams is a "Mr. Fixit" with a degree in audio recording.

The group members say they have no political agenda and their motto is "We don't give a shit" — though they're a little concerned about their parents knowing they swear. Adams does sound off on the Bill Clinton situation: "If he's president, he should be getting laid. He's a rock star."

Do the Electric Tigers hope to become rock stars so they can get some of the perks? Are they willing to go shirtless on magazine covers, if that's what it takes? Rusty says he'd bare his nipples on national TV tomorrow, if he knew he'd get lots of money (he'd like to buy a house). Adams and Samuels say they wouldn't. "Not now," says Samuels, "but if it was really hot"

Jerry Springer is long gone by the time the Electric Tigers climb back up on stage to close down the open mic. Their dramatic guitar hooks and intricate jamming swell in the empty room. All they need now is an audience.

The Electric Tigers play July 16 at Asylum, 121 Center St. Portland, at 9 p.m. with Bully Pulpit and Velvis. Tix: $3. 772-8274. Also August 1 at Free Street Taverna and on WMPG's Local Motives Sept. 18.

Making a name for yourself

Band names are almost always annoying. Watching the parade of bands passing through Portland's clubs over the past couple years, we were able to isolate this strand of particularly obnoxious monikers:

SNOT	Ku-Da-Tah
Mastication	Sacred Onion
Psychovsky	Mo Be Toad
Shark Sandwich	The Flaming Cows
Stygified	Angry Salad
Swift Ice Cubes	Hump Mussel
Dead Airborne Goat	Mute Stones
Desprit Avokadoz	Useless Chops

Night of the living freaks

If you've ever wondered what's inside Portland's Fine Arts Theatre but been wary of being spotted entering the porn emporium, you now have a shame-free reason to step behind the mysterious door. The Freak Show is the brainchild of Mike Whittaker, who manages local art-rockers Corberus Shoal, Fine Arts manager Dave Severance and freelance lighting designer Shawn Seamen. A marriage of local independent film and boundary-pushing music, the Freak Show is a radical departure from the cinema's usual X-rated fare — and if Whittaker, Severance and Seamen had their way, the festival's offbeat offerings would become the norm at the Congress Street theater.

Film curator Scott Sutherland has put together a program that includes Bob Poirier's moody debut, "Tangible Fathers," and films by Andrea Sarris and H. James Gilmore, Betsy Carson, Mike Hadley, John Harbeson, Ike Bubler, Kate Kaminsky and Karl Wagner. In the adjacent screening room, folks can check out music from Interstellar Policemen, insane noise-makers Anti-Friend Hut and Boston-based Juneau. At midnight, Portland's favorite experimental jam band, Corberus Shoal, takes the stage for the grand finale.

The Freak Show happens July 11 at the Fine Arts Theatre, 627 1/2 Congress St., Portland, at 8:30 p.m. Tix: $8 (18+). 772-7662.

■ ZOE S. MILLER

They put the needle on the record: DJs (from left) Seanne London, Marc Shepard and Nick Edwards

Scratching out a scene

Three DJs give Portland's hip-hop fans a reason to groove

■ ZOE S. MILLER

The clock in WMPG's DJ booth says 9:30 p.m. Seanne London (he pronounces his name scene) is at the controls, spinning a mixture of Top 40 hip-hop like The Notorious B.I.G., new-school R&B like Destiny's Child and lesser-known tracks from the likes of Heltah Skeltah. London's show, "Progress '98," which airs Saturday nights from 8-11, is a beacon for both the hip-hop curious and devoted fans.

As rap director at WMPG for the past two years, London, 29, has created a loose following — people lounging at home by the radio, or cruising in their cars. "It's like fishing," London says. "You throw it out and you don't know who's listening. It's mostly the young kids, but I got people listening, it's progress for me." Every 10 minutes or so, the phone lights up and London tells callers what's spinning on his turntables, takes requests and makes new friends.

What London does for the airwaves, Marc Shepard (a.k.a. DJ Moshé), 23, does for the dance crowd Fridays and Sundays at Zootz. For the past two years, Shepard's been mixing and scratching underground hip-hop for a growing audience of revelers. Together, London and Shepard are filling one of Portland's musical voids. They're also forging a community. "You just gotta know people," says Shepard. "There isn't really a hip-hop crowd. It seems like people here aren't really into it. Those who are, know each other."

London wants to produce an album this fall featuring Shepard and DJ buddy Nick Edwards (a.k.a. DJ Nicotine), 31, among others. "It's not about competition," says London. "It's just about putting Portland on the map."

Putting Portland on the hip-hop map will take some work, so London and Edwards spend their spare time spinning records together and dubbing mix tapes. Edwards came up with the name "Seannic Route" for their toolings, which draw from a wealth of musical styles. "We're very diverse," says Edwards. London agrees. "I'll take anything," he says. "Hip-hop is everything. I just love it. Just the damn word makes me excited."

Though both have worked at their turntable skills for several years — London deejayed at Boston clubs Axis and Venus de Milo before moving to Portland four years ago — London credits WMPG program director Jim Rand with opening his eyes to bigger possibilities. "It's just that freedom," London says of his show. "Most of what I play, people don't know. Why should I play what you hear on the radio? That's what MPG is all about anyway. That's why I love this station."

Still, London and Edwards are firm believers in giving fans what they want. "That's what deejaying is about," says London. "You look at the crowd and see what they wanna hear." When Edwards gets on the turntables, he blends Top 40 tracks with the music he likes — jungle, trip-hop and hardcore hip-hop. "When I met up with Seanne I was into house music," says Edwards. "But when you get into clubs you have to play stuff people know. You mix in what you know they want to hear with what you're trying to introduce them to. I'll sugarcoat a lot of it by putting lyrics from what they know with hardcore instrumental jams. I drop a jungle record with Usher over it."

Shepard is more of a purist. "There's people that just don't care about the DJ. They just want to hear songs they know," he says. "I've had people ask for Will Smith and I just say no." Shepard aims to introduce people to music they wouldn't hear if they didn't come to hear him. But he does keep his eye on the crowd to see how they're reacting. If they don't like something, he gets rid of it quick.

Shepard's been listening to hip-hop as long as he's been into music — Public Enemy, EPMD, Big Daddy Kane. In high school, he spent weekend nights at The Bounty, a now-defunct club, where he'd go to dance and talk to longtime Portland DJ Dale "Da Dred" Dorset. "Back then I loved it because it was the only place you could go to listen to hip-hop," Shepard says. "I wouldn't be into it now because it's Top 40." Then he started deejaying benefits and dances at local schools, while continuing to hone his craft at home. Finally, after months of urging Zootz owners Bob Antisdel and George Sweeting to give him a shot, he won the Friday night disk-spinning spot at the downtown club last year.

Shepard is into underground rap and hip-hop — the stuff you won't hear on MTV. He also brings jazz, soul and old-school R&B into his mixes. Ultimately, Shepard intends to move from deejaying to producing, making beats and scratching on his own music. "That's my real passion," he says, "but I just don't have access to it here." He may leave Portland as soon as January '99 for Boston, Seattle or San Diego — he hasn't decided yet — but he hopes to bring what he learns in the outside world back home in the form of a studio, record label and even a club where he could "give people a chance to come up and do their thing." He knows what it's like to grow up without outlets. "You want to show your skills," Shepard says. "When someone lets you do that, it's great."

Shepard makes a living spinning records. London and Edwards don't. But for all three, what began as a hobby has become a driving force. "For me," says Edwards, "it's just the thrill of seeing a crowd move to the sound I'm creating."

"That's the money right there," London agrees. "I get my biggest joy out of playing something that you just can't buy."

A mischievous smile flashes on Edwards' face. "We're pioneers," he says.

You can find DJ Seanne mix tapes at Bull Moose Records or listen to "Progress '98" Saturdays on WMPG 90.9 from 8-11 p.m. Hear DJ Moshé at Zootz, 31 Forest Ave in Portland, Fridays with DJ Nicotine and Sundays.

Local beat

I can't remember the exact moment new music stopped mattering to me. Though I still reached reflexively for the latest record reviews in glossy magazines, and I continued to read Dan Short's column in CBW, I found that as I got closer to 30 I recognized fewer of the bands. Even the names of the genres — ranging from trip-hop to grindcore — sounded alien. Music had marched right past me.

Prodded by friends, this winter I attended a Lincolnville gig in Portland. As Ryan Dolan, the local trio's babyfaced drummer, pounded out a power-pop frenzy, he looked determined and fearless as Speed Racer flying around the track on two wheels. MTV and commercial radio may give us hits for singing along, but Dolan and his high-flying bandmates are real. They're onstage playing songs we won't hear anyplace else. They're demanding our attention, and they're asking only to be heard.

Local musicians need an audience. That's true for the fiddle bands that set up in Congress Square on summer evenings, for the lone flute player on Exchange Street and for the DJs mixing a big urban beat for our small-city dance crowds. Listening to neighbors make music is a pleasure as old as humankind and as modern as a towering stack of amps. Portland's bands, songs and musicians are as much a part of the city's social fabric as tugboats, fishmongers and the drawbridge over the Fore River.

In this week's issue, we take you on a tour of the local music scene (see "Tuning in," page 10), stopping to listen to house DJs scratching records, to the Electric Tigers cranking out a guitar-heavy roar, to Go Button launching eccentric tunes. We're telling you about these artists in hopes you'll find them worth giving a try, or at least get inspired to search for a groove you like better.

We need local music to stave off the creeping pallor of blandness broadcast by commercial TV and radio, and local musicians need you.

The photo of Peaks Island thrift store owner Lalan Kelso ("Clothes encounters of the second kind," 7.2.98) was taken by Arunas Bukauskas.

Dave Draper of the Maine Photo Co-Op said that contrary to our 7.2.98 report in "Ear to the pavement," he is not unhappy to have been laid off as part of the nonprofit's attempt to pare expenses. Draper said he continues to teach classes and volunteer at the Co-Op, and he wishes the organization well.

Counting on Al

Your "Politics and other mistakes" column of June 18 ("What lack of love has done") included two glaring inaccuracies. First, the column erroneously asserts that the Clean Election check-off on Maine income tax returns will bring in only $177,609. In fact, that figure represents only a partial tally. According to Maine Revenue Services, nearly one-third of the tax returns have not yet been processed. When the next count is released in July, it is certain to be substantially higher.

Second, the column implies that the check-off is the only source of funding for the Clean Election Fund, which is simply not the case. The Fund receives over $2 million annually from other sources. Regardless of the final result of the check-off, the Fund will contain more than $4 million by the year 2000 when the new system goes into effect.

According to Maine Revenue Services, more people are checking the Clean Election check-off than all the other check-offs on the Maine tax form combined, including the Children's Fund, the Wildlife Fund and the political parties. Even in its first year, it looks like participation in the Clean Election check-off will exceed that for the presidential check-off on the Federal income tax form.

Maine voters passed the Clean Election Act in 1996 and created a new kind of campaign finance system — one that cuts the connection between private special-interest money and public elections. We'll be working hard in the next two years to educate voters and potential candidates about this new system. Meanwhile, your readers should know that the Clean Election Fund is off to a very strong start.

Al, you're so naive

I am moved to respond to Al Diamon's column "What lack of love has done." Al, are you more naive than we all thought you were, or what? Giving $3 to a "clean elections fund" for the state is like —

- 1) Giving the post office $3 for "faster delivery."
- 2) Giving the I.R.S. $3 to become "fair-minded."
- 3) Giving Bill Clinton $3 for the "Monogamy Project."

You want people in Maine to support "clean elections"? Find us a couple of politicians who aren't self-serving.

As for the second half of your column, regarding Tom Allen's stand on international affairs, who cares? This man couldn't find his ass two-handed in a well-lit room in Portland.

Men's reproductive rights

Dana Packard's letter to CBW ("Be a man about it," 6.25.98) was interesting and thought provoking. His heavy-handed sarcasm aside, I found myself in harmony with many of his points about men needing to be aware of the injustices and inequities associated with traditional male hegemony. I take issue, however, with his narrow interpretation of reproductive rights and his assertion that these rights belong solely to women.

The biological imperatives of gestation do not preclude men from having rights and responsibilities for that which is reproduced. Mr. Packard is shocked by the notion of someone claiming jurisdiction over another human being's body, but this is precisely what occurs in instances where a woman is awarded custody of a child and chooses to exclude the child's father from the child's life. Certainly there are valid and compelling reasons why this may be the only sane course of action, but this also occurs in instances where none such exist.

Mr. Packard appears to take pride in the breadth of his reading and so must surely be aware of works which illuminate the critical roles that fathers play as parents. He should also be aware of the social devastation wrought by the increasing absence of fathers in our nation's families. Where such absence is due to men's failure to assume their responsibilities as fathers, shame on us as men. Where such absence is due to gender and role stereotypes and societal bias, shame on us all.

As men, we cannot afford to "shut up" about what happens to our children.

CBW Q

Why can't there be bicycle lanes on every street in Portland?

Not every street is wide enough or suitably paved to allow for bike lanes, according to Mark Chase of the Alliance for Transportation Choice, a Portland coalition whose goals include the re-striping of city streets to allow for bicycle traffic. Chase is optimistic that many of Portland's streets could have bike lanes added at relatively little cost. He cited a 1997 study by the Greater Portland Council of Governments that indicated 30 miles of road, consisting of 36 street segments, could be re-striped to allow for bike lanes at a cost of $64,000. The Alliance has already succeeded in getting bike lanes added to Marginal Way, and the group plans to seek funding from the Portland City Council this fall to pay for more improvements.

More Maine summer history

In the interest of historical accuracy, I would like to bring to light information not contained in Al Diamon's history of Maine summer (6.18.98).

Although summer did not officially arrive until 1887, the state Legislature conducted a top-secret feasibility project in 1883. Water was channeled from the Androscoggin River to form an artificial beach near Popham. (Some experts argue the site was actually nearer what were then known as Bailey's Hill and Orr's Hill, the word "island" having no relevance at the time.)

The experiment ended tragically when at least three members of the Legislature were caught in a rip tide as the river back-flowed and all were lost. Being appropriately dressed for impending winter, they didn't stand a chance. The bodies were never found, and all other evidence of the experiment was buried somewhere in what is now Baxter State Park. The entire affair was hushed up in the best political manner.

By the way, I attended high school with Mr. Diamon and am delighted that his interest in scholarly research remains undiminished.

A challenge to Portlanders

The Gay Pride parade in Portland was quite an affair. It shows that people really do turn out when it's something they care about.

I hereby challenge every veteran in the city of Portland to set aside November 11, 1998 for the Veterans Day parade.

Come out and march with the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the school bands. Show Portland that we have pride and really do care.

Every member of every veterans organization should be on Congress Street to salute the memory and sacrifice of our fallen brothers.

Hold on to history

With respect to "System Error" (6.25.98), another view is warranted.

Indeed, many poll workers appear to come from among our older citizens. Indeed, some may do it to supplement their incomes. I suspect many do. Contrary to popular opinion, the great majority of older folks live on very modest — often marginal — incomes.

However, we may also be dealing with a matter of tradition. A nice tradition in fact. I am now in my 70s and remember going with my mom or dad to vote when I was a child in the Boston area. In my child's eye, back then many poll workers appeared to be much older than even my mom and dad. They seemed to have done an adequate job back then, although I'm sure there were occasional difficulties. Perhaps life was simpler.

It became apparent over the years that poll service in part had become a kind of reward for older people who had been involved in politics themselves, perhaps had family in politics or were responding to a sense of civic responsibility. And over time this service also became a matter of pride. Pride in recognition (a kind of unstated honor) and pride in their continuing participation in the democratic process. The older generation is very prideful about this country and its electoral processes.

So I think this: If occasionally an older poll worker seems less attentive or alert than we would like, let's on our part show a little more sensitivity and patience. We can use a little more of each these days, can't we?

Let's also look at the other likely causes of the problems encountered in Portland. You can hardly fault folks if one voting location or precinct has to handle multiple voting districts or has to deal with as many as nine different ballots.

Clearly there should be more preparation (and training) for upcoming elections, depending upon the simplicity or complexity expected. This is the job of election managers. Also just as clearly, there should be sufficient election supervisors on site to see that difficulties or confusions are ironed out quickly.

But let's not put seasoned poll workers out to pasture. In addition to performing their tasks well, they provide warmth and community at the polling stations, as well as being the best representation of our living democracy.

A residential business plan

I read with interest Kimberly Jean Smith's article on Congress Street ("Surviving the boom," 6.25.98).

It seems that every analysis of downtown Congress Street that I read leaves out the one ingredient that will ensure long-term survival, and that's residential expansion. It has long been my belief that, where possible, above-street-level space should be converted to residential living space, and the city should provide incentives for owners to do so.

People living downtown will provide the 24-hour presence so necessary to maintain the integrity of the area after the office workers go home and businesses close up for the day.

At the recent Downtown Improvement District's annual meeting, the guest speaker (a person involved with the revitalization of lower Manhattan) stated that residential conversion was the most important piece of that revitalization plan. He, in fact, stated that New York City went so far as to forgive real-estate taxes for a period of time if owners converted empty space and even office space to residential use.

It seems the best reason to shop downtown is if one lives downtown. More people living downtown will support existing retail and perhaps draw more retail. Why the planners don't see this escapes me. Create the population base in the area and retail will come without incentives.

Is this plan too simple or is it not glamorous enough?

No freaks allowed: The Freak Show, a night of local film and music (see page 14), could have been just the start of cutting edge, community-generated happenings at the Fine Arts Theatre, a porn emporium on Congress Street. Fine Arts' manager Dave Severance and a group of investors, including local lighting designer Shawn Seamen, made a pitch to lease the venue this spring, but gave up when the current owners — Associated Theatre Management Corp. of Waltham, Mass. — said they wanted to screen porn shows and operate the adult shop during the day, and let Seamen and his cohorts run their "youth-oriented" theater at night.

ear to the pavement

The Fine Arts has been under pressure for a couple of years, including a police crackdown on public sex acts and city attempts to revoke the theater's license. Which has Seamen and Severance scratching their heads as to why the company won't throw in the towel. All the Fine Arts owner "sees is porn," says Seamen, "because that's how he made his money 20 years ago."

Does this mean the plan for a new arts/theater space is kaput? "Naw," says Seamen. "I'm always looking for deals."

■ Crossed wires: WGAN employees were treated to a live broadcast on the station's intercom June 30 of general manager Bob Gold informing local talk-show host John McDonald that his fledgling program would be replaced by the syndicated sound of Boston loudmouth Howie Carr. "That was an honest mistake," said McDonald of Gold's telephone intercom faux pas, which subsequently set off rumors that McDonald had been given his walking papers. Obviously, McDonald would have liked to keep his show — at least until the end of the current 13-week ratings period — but had little to say on the record about the decision. Gold said McDonald is "still very much employed here," while program director Dave Winsor explained McDonald will continue with his Saturday and Sunday spots and do daily features on life in Maine. "I like John a lot," Winsor said, explaining the station opted for Carr's show because of its national ratings. "We're playing the dice on it, saying it's gonna be big."

■ Family values: We won't even speculate about what goes on in the Portland Sea Dogs' locker room, but on the field, the baseball team appears to be increasingly gay friendly. Take, for instance, the July 6 promotion which featured the wedding of the team's two Trash Monsters, the costumed waste receptacles that wander around the stands at Hadlock Field during games. Although the ceremony concluded with the two creatures being pronounced "Mr. and Mrs. Trash Monster," we have it on good authority that both TMs are actually female. The religious right notwithstanding, same-sex marriage is alive and well in Maine. CBW

Who put the soul in industrial metal? Incongruous as it seems, Sevendust did. The Atlanta fivesome came together around lead singer Lajon Witherspoon, who credits Sam Cooke as one of his biggest influences. Don't be fooled though, they devote a great deal of energy to banging, pounding and squealing their way through songs that blend jazz and funk with hard rock elements. "We take pride in putting on an energetic show," says guitarist John Connolly. "Getting on stage and jumping around like idiots; that's our job." Sevendust tours with the illustrious Ozfest this summer and plays July 10 at the State Theater, 609 Congress St., Portland, at 7 pm. Coz Chamber headlines. Tix: $19.50 (all-ages). 888-767-NEXT.

FINNFEST '98

Not to be confused with FinFest, the annual gathering of great white sharks in Deadwood, South Dakota, FinnFest '98 is a celebration of all things Finnish. As in Finland, visitors to the festival can choose from among 40 events scheduled for each day, including lectures on the work of Finnish photographer Kosti Ruohomaa, demonstrations of traditional Finnish cooking, musical performances by Finnish celebs like Katriina Honkanen and dance performances by Finnish troupe ISOT. Crafts and other authentic goodies are also available at the Töri, a Finnish marketplace. Opening celebration at Hill Gymnasium, University of Southern Maine's Gorham campus, from 4-5:30 p.m. The festival continues through July 12. Registration is required for all FinnFest events except the Töri. Cost: $25 per person/per day ($80 for four days). Registration is each day from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. For registration info, call 780-5960. For a full list of events, times and locations, call 780-5965.

FRANK CARLBERG AND CHRISTINE CORREA

Despite all their bad press, everyone knows sharks are one thing and one thing only: cool, baby, cool. So are jazz musicians. Pianist and composer Frank Carlberg, a native of — lo and behold, Finland — brings his smokin' quintet to town. The fivesome, whose firebrand jazz has been described as sophisticated, progressive, romantic, and in one odd instance, "tough on hard to remove tub and tile stains," boasts a vocalist extraordinaire from New York City, Christine Correa. But the music isn't all that has rhythm. The performance also features readings of 20th-century poems by Kerouac, Akhmatova, Stevens, Hollo, Creeley and Tagore. At Starbird Music Hall, 525 Forest Ave., Portland, at 8:30 p.m. Tickets: $7. 828-1310.

OPENING RECEPTIONS AT ICA

Fashion sharks like you know what's hip — which is why you're always hanging out at art openings, lighting everyone's cigarettes and trilling your R's. Maine College of Art's Institute of Contemporary Art has three openings for dilettantes to strut their stuff. "Something From Nothing: The Conceptual Quilts of Susie Brandt" features seven large-scale pieces by the New York artist, each offering alternatives to traditional notions of femininity and domestic labor. "Plaster Poem Girl" by Lesley Dill consists of one piece: a full-frontal photosilkscreen of a nude woman, stitched with hanging threads and marked with painted words. Finally, Judy Labrasca's "Mr. Right," a collection of Polaroid photographs of such ephemera as bottle caps and Crackerjack toys, explores the cultural fascination with icons and the ideals they represent. Join the artists for an opening reception at the Institute of Contemporary Art, MECA Building, 522 Congress St., Portland, from 5-7 p.m. The exhibitions continue through July 30. Hours: Wed.-Sat. 10 a.m.-5 p.m. 879-5742.

"ART IN MONUMENT SQUARE"

Art collectors can go on a feeding frenzy, of sorts, at "Art In Monument Square." Organized by Portland's Downtown District, the bohemian fair features 22 different displays, from jewelry and pottery to paintings and watercolors (and yes, Mom and Dad's favorite, body painting) — all for sale. Picassos in the crowd even have the chance to try their hand at sidewalk art, with chalk provided by Artist and Craftsman Supply. However, just plain sloppy work cannot be excused as "surrealism." At Monument Sq., Portland, from noon-3 p.m. Free. 772-6828.

"CONFLICT SERIES"

Just like sharks, if art lovers stop moving, they can't breathe. So as long as you're swimming in a world of pastels, oils and watercolors, you can check out Dozier Bell's exhibition, "Conflict Series." Bell's first Maine show of new work in seven years, the display comprises 25 10" x 10" paintings of landscapes. Join the artist for an opening reception at June Fitzpatrick Gallery, 112 High St., Portland, from 5-7 p.m. The exhibition shows through Aug 1. Hours: Tues.-Sat. noon-5 p.m. 772-1961.

Dozier Bell's "Conflict Series #10," acrylic and mylar on linen, is now showing at the June Fitzpatrick Gallery.

SHORT

Cuts

■ DAN SHORT

Live, local and loaded with talent

Even when one is immersed in the Portland music scene, it's easy to forget how remarkable it is. For a small city with an even smaller supply of club-going music fans, Portland has a large, talented and diverse selection of musical artists. To help celebrate CBW's special music issue, I've chosen three bands — Cerberus Shoal, Diesel Doug and the Long Haul Truckers and Lincolnville — that not only are the best the city has to offer, but also demonstrate the range of musical styles found here.

There isn't a band in the nation, much less Portland, that's as unafraid as Cerberus Shoal. What other artist would perform an hour-and-a-half song and then follow it up with a 45-minute piece for an encore? What other group would perform with backs to the audience? Who else has a name most people can't spell correctly, much less comprehend? Nobody except Cerberus Shoal.

You never know what you're going to get when you see this group in performance. Shoal's music is a mix of '70s progressive rock, artful post-punk and jazz improvisation that (along with their lineup) changes with every show. However much the band changes, though, there's still an essence of thoughtful, complex intensity the listener can feel, even in the music's quietest moments. In the near future, the group will have a track, "Omphalos," in the Detroit-based magazine/compilation CD, "Mass Transfer." Members are also working on "Myrrh," what they call a "45-minute magnum opus." Cerberus Shoal remains a band that's always growing, never satisfied and continually demanding more from its audience and itself.

It's a tribute to the Portland scene that the city can foster the likes of both Cerberus Shoal and roots-rockers Diesel Doug and the Long Haul Truckers — two bands that, besides their hometown, have next to nothing in common. Both bands are valued by the locals because both fill separate needs. For Cerberus Shoal, it's artistry, adventure and the power of imagination. For Diesel Doug, it's craftsmanship, emotional sincerity and the force of tradition.

DD&TLHT draws its style in equal parts from Buck Owens and the Rolling Stones, and though that mix isn't original or complex, it certainly works. With their simple approach, the band puts semi-satirical songs like "Wicked Ways" and "Gold Wing Mama" on the same CD as serious personal numbers, such as "Not Much to Say" and "One Light." It's the same attitude that pervades the Truckers' five shows, where Billy Joe Shaver's "Wrecking Ball" might follow right after Prince's "Purple Rain." It's a safe bet the album the group is currently recording, tentatively titled "The Fine Art of Carousing," won't contain any big surprises, but Diesel Doug doesn't really need to make surprises to make great music.

Somewhere between the Truckers and the Shoal is Lincolnville. Since the band's days as Car, it's brought traditional songwriting values into a modern rock context. Their 1996 debut album was a watershed for Portland rock, a heady mixture of passion, songwriting craft and experimentation that was as good as anything a local band had done before — or for that matter, after.

Since its name change, Lincolnville has moved toward a harder, more traditional rock sound. In recent shows, the band seems less daring, but the passion is still there and the songs are still inspired. The group's profile on the local scene may not be as prominent as it once was; Lincolnville doesn't gig as much as it used to and hasn't released anything for two years. But according to drummer Ryan Dolan, the band is recording demos, and waiting to see how they sound before considering any releases. "Releasing a record is like getting a tattoo," Dolan says, explaining the delay. "Once you've done it, it's there forever." But, he adds, the band considers its new work the best it's ever done. While it's unfortunate we'll have to wait for a new Lincolnville record, it's fortunate that we have the group, along with Cerberus Shoal and Diesel Doug, as Portland bands.

Cerberus Shoal plays "The Freak Show" July 11 at the Fine Arts Theatre, 627 1/2 Congress St., Portland, at 8:30 p.m. Tix: $8 (18+). 772-7662.
Diesel Doug and the Long Haul Truckers play on WMPG's "Local Motives" July 10 at 7:30 p.m.

BOOK READING TONIGHT!

7:30-9PM

Edgcomb author, Van Reid, will be on hand to read selections from his debut novel, Cordelia Underwood or the Marvelous Beginnings of the Moosepath League, set in nineteenth century Portland.

"Cordelia Underwood is a wonderfully exuberant, funny and good-natured novel, which does for the rugged coast of Maine what Lonesome Dove does for the American West.... Van Reid's is a new voice in American fiction, and a powerful one. Cordelia Underwood is picturesque storytelling at its rollicking best." -Howard Frank Mosher.

"I kept thinking of the young Dickens- the adventures of the hapless, rollicking Pickwickians- as I read Cordelia Underwood, which I thoroughly enjoyed. Van Reid has written a delightful, breezy novel with the kind of old-fashioned storytelling and generous vision of human nature that are hard to come by in this cynical age." -Jay Parini Question: In a city jammed with restaurants, how do you choose where to go out to dinner?

Answer: Read the reviews.

Frommer's 1998 Guide to New England "...the Zephyr Grill sets an inviting mood with rich colors and pinpoint spotlights over the tables that carve alluring islands of light. Main courses might include Grilled Leg of Lamb with Roasted Garlic...or Pan-Blackened Chicken with a spicy remoulade in a flour tortilla...and the seafood, however they serve it, is fresh and good."

Great Destinations Coast of Maine Guide Book "The service is smooth, attentive and unpretentious. The food is consistently excellent and always freshly presented. The menu changes regularly, but always maintains a solid core of our favorites. The Zephyr is a bit off of Portland's beaten track, but is well worth the trip."

Yankee Magazine Travel Guide to New England "Editor's pick, 1997...With so many unique and diverse places to choose from, we felt Zephyr Grill is especially worthy of a traveler's stop."

The rules of marriage are simple. One: If your wife's name is Mary, don't make it a habit of addressing her as Suzanne or Kimberly, etc. Two: If your husband says it's the alternator that's making that ticking noise in the car — then dammit, it's the alternator that's making that ticking noise! Three: If you're married to a hitman, try really, really hard to keep your spouse happy. As part of its summer repertoire, the Theater Project presents the dramatic comedy "Faithful" — written by actor Chazz Palminteri ("Bullets Over Broadway") — about a mysterious hitman who eagerly anticipates his next assignment: rubbing out his wife. In the end, however, the job proves to be more complicated than he'd expected. Bite the bullet July 15 at the Theater Project, 14 School St, Brunswick, at 8 pm. Tix: $12. (professional non-Equity.) For mature audiences. Also July 17, 23 and 25, Aug 1, 6, 8, 14 and 21 at 8 pm. Dinner theater is Thursday night. Tix: $23.95. JIM PINFOLD

Walking inside the fog that swallowed the coast in mid-June, I easily forgot the pier, the rides, and the fries with vinegar that were less than 10 minutes away. Entire families appeared out of nowhere as the gray momentarily parted. Unseen, 50 feet across the sand, children stood yelping in the waves. Despite the conversation and despite the cool damp air, I could hear my little cranial Walkman playing a tape-loop over and over and over: "Hot fun in the summertime/Oh yeah, hot fun in the summertime." It's not a song that whispers to you. Sly is belting it out. The band is belting it out. On my tape they never get to the verse. It's all chorus.

Summer songs. Each year at least one magazine runs an article about them. Fifteen months ago we held a spring-song contest in this column. The success rate was pitiful. As with any bad idea, it shouldn't be discarded, just recycled. Now we have a new contest with even punier prizes. Each set of lyrics below comes from a song with the word "summer" or a variation of that word in the title (e.g., summerhouse, summertime, summerwood, summersault). You receive one point for each correct song title, one point for each correct composer and one point for the artist who made the song famous. (If there are several artists, we'll accept any of the right ones.) Since there are seven sets of lyrics, a perfect score would be 21. Just send a postcard with the each lyric's number and your well-informed guesses to: Seven, c/o Casco Bay Weekly, 561 Congress Street, Portland, Maine 04101.

"Johnny, tell them what they'll win." The top two winners will receive an inflatable beach ball and a singularly unattractive beach towel. In addition, the first place winner will receive a $25 gift certificate to his or her favorite watering hole. Clearly, this is a contest for bragging rights and not much more.

Submissions must arrive by July 18. Winners will be announced when we get around to it.

Hints: There's not a single Gershwin lyric among the seven, and not even one song by the Beach Boys. And despite an overwhelming desire to add "Wonderful Summer" by Robin Ward, I knew I'd be terrified of any individual who recognized it ("It was so heavenly/You meant the world to me/And anyone could see/That I was in love").

1 "Cool town evening in the city/Dressin' so fine and lookin' so pretty/Cool cat lookin' for a kitty/Gonna look in every corner of the city." Got your hopes up? Nah, too easy.

OK, here's another:

"When the cool of the pond makes you wanna drop down on it/When the smell of the lawn makes you flop down on it/When the teenage car gets the cop down on it/That time is here for one more year."

2 "Circling like a river/Over brightly colored stone/Breaking up my soul/And taking part of me home/Leaving the other half to tumble all alone/Love, love where did you go?"

3 "If you recall/We stopped beside a little flower stall/A bunch of bright forget-me-nots were all/You ever bought me."

4 "It feels like winter/Oh, happy song today/Winter/I can hear The Master say/The snow will fall, the snow will fall, yeah."

5 "Take a walk with me down by Avalon/And I will show you/It ain't why, why, why/It ain't why, why, why/It ain't why, why, why/It just is."

6 "Like painted kites/Those days and nights/They went flying by/The world was new/Beneath a blue/Umbrella sky."

7 "When we're walking along/Hand in hand /I'm a thinkin' of your mama/While you're thinkin' of another man/But you can go ahead if you want to/Cuz I ain't got no papers on you."

Thanks to Philly for the help. Now he can't enter.

A Tradition Reborn.

When Pilsner was first crafted back in the 1840s, the world acclaimed it as the finest beer ever brewed. Distinguished by its light golden color and crisp, refreshing taste, it wasn't long before Pilsner became America's favorite beer. Unfortunately, today's mass-produced Pilsners offer only a bland imitation of the original delightful balance of fine malts and hops. Now it's been left in the highly capable hands of small local brewers like Casco Bay Brewing Co. to reintroduce beer drinkers to the full flavor and cold-lagered clarity of this German style classic. Casco Bay Pilsner. Light and crystal clear with a pure white foamy head. Brewed in small 20 barrel batches and lagered for a full 3 weeks for a fresh bold taste. Look for it on top, and in 12 oz. bottles in your grocer's beer case.

Have film, will travel

No need to jet across the Atlantic to Cannes when we have our very own Maine International Film Festival (MIFF) just up the road in Waterville. The first-time festival promises 40 films from 14 countries, including Wong Kar-Wai's "Fallen Angels" and Louis Saia's "Les Boys," plus seminars, discussions and live music.

Festivities begin July 10 with the world premiere of Bill Chinnock's "The Forgotten Maine," an introspective documentary about rural families whose old-fashioned ways of life are disappearing under modern economic pressures. On July 11, the state's budding cinematic artists get their moment on the silver screen at the 21st Maine Student Film and Video Festival.

Among the festival's guests is legendary documentary maker Frederick Wiseman, who will present his newest film, "Public Housing," which follows life in an inner-city project in Chicago.

Actor/director/writer Tim Russ will showcase "East of Hope Street," the story of minority teens caught in Los Angeles's child protection system. And cinematic elder statesman Costa-Gavras will host a discussion of political film and a screening of "Z," his classic thriller about social upheaval in Greece during the 1960s.

The festival closes July 19 with "Pants on Fire," Maine native Rocky Collins' comedy about two marriages on the edge.

Embarrassment is not a feeling we ask movies to provoke. Joy, sadness, fear — those emotions are fine. Distressed smiles, titers of discomfort — not a good movie experience. The insult is compounded when, looking for cheap thrills in the likes of Jerry Bruckheimer's latest explosion spectacular, "Armageddon," we find an endless reel of patriotic propaganda and sentimental schmaltz liable to stimulate uncomfortable seat-shifting in even the hardest of moviegoers. The trouble with "Armageddon" is that it's packed with such appealing actors and amazing action that you really, really want to like it. In fact, in a perverse scab-picking way, you do like it — when you can stop hiding your face long enough to watch the fireballs explode.

Aside from being a comedy, a love story and an outer-space action extravaganza, "Armageddon" is a parade of stereotypes. At the film's center is Harry Stamper (Bruce Willis), the roughneck king of oil drilling with a mouthful of nails and a heart of gold. Kid genius A.J. (Ben Affleck) is the son he never had — the golden boy who never gets the approval he wants because Harry's just too tough to say he cares. When Harry finds out A.J.'s been bedding down with Liv Tyler, who plays Stamper's shy smartypants daughter Grace (the apple of his eye, in case every previous Bruce Willis film didn't prepare you), Harry's ready to blow A.J.'s balls off. Fortunately for A.J., Harry settles for a shot in the leg.

For color, there's a crew of generic characters: the doe-eyed Midwesterner, the fat guy who's always cracking jokes, the hulking but soft-natured black guy, the right-hand man with nothing to lose and the wise-cracking sleaze bag (played, of course, by Steve Buscemi).

After New York City is partially annihilated by a meteor shower, scientists discover an asteroid catapulting toward Earth at 22,000 miles an hour. With 18 days before impact (a.k.a. Armageddon), NASA's executive director, Dan Truman (Billy Bob Thornton), calls on every military mind he's got to stop the dang thing. Jokes abound about how budget cuts have brought the decline of military intelligence and countless egos are trampled as they scramble for a Plan to Save the Earth. Unfortunately, all 200 brainiacs come up blank.

Enter Harry and his pack of misfits and good ol' boys. Their collective rap sheet may be as long as the Mississippi, but they can drill better than anyone on earth (and yes, drilling is a key element in the Plan to Save the Earth).

Besides, could there be anything more American than a bunch of losers saving humankind? How poetic that after the government invested billions of tax dollars in high-tech gadgets and stealth aircraft, the machinery to save the planet comes not from bureaucrats, but from a private businessman who can't deal with authority. True bravery, we find, stems not from following orders but from defying them to follow your heart. Screw protocol, says Bruckheimer, illustrating his point through the heroics of Harry and A.J. and the strong-mindedness of Grace.

"Armageddon" leaves you with so many deep, deep questions to ponder. Are humans about to go the way of the dinosaurs? Could love save the world? And most importantly, how should one spend his last night on earth? Making amends with estranged loved ones, holding a private conversation with God, having sex till the cows come home? Buscemi's got it: You party like it's 1999.

There's no doubt about it, some people are gonna love this movie. After all, it's essentially a glammed-up, star-studded Star Wars set to Aerosmith's greatest hits. And as action-disaster films go, it has some stellar moments: Paris dissolving in a mushroom cloud, Affleck and company cruising the asteroid in a souped-up moon jeep and Tyler tackling Thornton. But something important was lost in this marriage of macho posturing and to-die-for love — namely, common sense. In trying to be all things to all people, "Armageddon" has shot itself in the foot. If I can't sit through Affleck's cooing pillow talk without wanting to vomit, how will the guys who want to ban "chick flicks" manage? Enough said.

LETHAL WEAPON 4 "By God, listen to me!" growled the studio chief, slamming his fist down on the conference table. "We need a sure-fire summer hit, or heads will roll!" Clamping an unlit cigarette between his teeth, he leaned back into his executive chair and stared at the frightened faces around him. "I've got an idea," Higgins finally said, his voice trembling. "Why not another Lethal Weapon film, this time with even more gratuitous characters than the last one?" Another pencil-necked suit chimed in. "And with crazy action heroes performing impossible physical stunts!" After a moment of silence, the chief pulled the cigar from his mouth and pointed at Higgins. "You," he said, "are one helluva guy!" And with that, they all awkwardly high-fived each other before going to perform their afternoon eponyms. Hoys Clark's Pond, Hoys Falmouth 10

MADELINE In "Fargo," Frances McDormand portrayed law-enforcement as slightly less than than working for the Department of Motor Vehicles. Now, in this big screen adaptation of Ludwig Bemmel's classic children's series about a troublemaking nine-year-old, McDormand takes on the role of a nun — an occupation whose winceful effectiveness is slightly more exhilarating than working for the DMV. Maine Mall Cinema, Hoys Falmouth 10

Every guy's nightmare: losing out on the chance by getting his (ahem) manhood caught in his zipper in front of the most beautiful girl in school. Whatta ya do? ARMAGEDDON The TV ads have been playing this as an officer-and-gentleman romance flick, like "The Right Stuff" with appealing 20-somethings. But we know better. REAL ASTROLOGY

By Rob Brezsky

ARIES (MARCH 21-APRIL 19): There's nothing like a big family gathering to make you feel like a powerless, neurotic child again. Old sibling rivalries break out, provoking immature feelings you thought you'd outgrown. Mom and Dad effortlessly resurrect their skill at turning you invisible, and every little exchange becomes a desperate struggle to be true to yourself. I'm invoking this scenario, Aries, to prepare you for the fact that the people you grew up with will soon be swarming all over your aura—even if you don't actually get together with them. Fortunately, the cosmos has chosen this moment to help you begin to cancel the curses that any of your loved ones may have cast on you—even the inadvertent ones.

TAURUS (APRIL 20-MAY 20): I have evaluated the astrological omens to determine what tasks the cosmos is most likely to help you master in the coming weeks. Here are my conclusions: 1) Learning to distinguish between your iffy hunches and your foolproof intuitions; 2) smelling the difference between repressed tumors and inside dope that's fresh and hot; 3) making sure you always know whether what you're looking at is really there or is merely a projection of your own expectations.

GEMINI (MAY 21-JUNE 20): My alchemy teacher loves to remind me that the most effective way to cook up enlightenment is not to turn up the heat all the way in erratic bursts of enthusiasm, but rather to simmer long and slow and steady. In other words, it's far better to meditate just ten minutes a day if you do it regularly than to meditate two hours on one inspired morning and then not do it again for a month. I believe this is a potent principle for many other projects, from eliminating a bad habit to bringing more love into your life. And judging from your current astrological aspects, Gemini, this would be an excellent time to increase your mastery of the "steadily simmering" approach.

CANCER (JUNE 21-JULY 22): Why am I just giving in and letting the full moon rock and roll my emotions? I blame it on the Cancerian part of my personal chart—you know, the part of me that loves to go with the flow, even if the flow is a mile-high tsunami. Fortunately for me (and for you if you're in the same boat), this is one of those times when wild rides are likely to have pretty snappy endings. I predict that the delirium we're inviting into our lives will unleash a flood tide of the splashy creativity our sign is famous for.

LEO (JULY 23-22): It'll be a good week to kiss the feet of helpers, to perform an act of kindness for someone who can't repay you, and to return to the fork in the road where you made a wrong turn a while back. It won't be such a great time to forge an alliance with barbarians, or gorge yourself to excess with treats that are only good for you in moderation, or be so open-minded that your brains fall out. Emphasize reverence and gratitude and curiosity in the coming days, Leo. Avoid casual commitments, reckless promises, and the devil's boiling cauldron.

VIRGO (AUG. 23-SEPT. 22): The biggest celebration in recorded history is still 539 days away. But there's no reason you should save all your best bacchanalian moves for New Year's Eve 1999. You see, Virgo, the cosmos is even now whipping up the most ferociously festive conditions you've experienced in many moons. From an astrological perspective, this week will provide you with all the yayas you'll need in order to party as if it were already the night the millennium ends.

LIBRA (SEPT. 23-OCT. 22): The dangers of excessive politeness are nowhere better exemplified than in the medieval legend of Perceval, Arthur's purest knight. His quest for the Holy Grail leads him to the castle of a wounded king, where he sees a mysterious and beautiful bowl. He's dying to know more about this wondrous artifact, but he holds his tongue. His training as a knight has taught him that it's inconsiderate to talk too much or express excessive curiosity. As a result, he doesn't ask the key question that would heal the king. The next morning, he wakes up to find the castle mysteriously empty, and leaves having missed a fabulous opportunity. I'm telling you this tale, Libra, so that you might avoid the same fate. Be a well-mannered diplomat the other 51 weeks of the year, but not this one.

SCORPIO (OCT. 23-NOV. 21): Have you ever read the "Weekly World News," the tabloid that out-wards the "National Enquirer" in its celebration of entertaining lunacy? If I were a writer for that rag, I would eagerly seize upon some of your recent adventures, blow them slightly out of proportion, and concoct a slew of tall tales. "Explorer Sues Over Faulty Flying Carpet" might be the headline of my first piece about you. "Interpecies Love: The Scorpion and the Eagle" could be another. Then there'd be "Horny Bigfoot Steals Ghost Ship into Port," "New Sex-in-the-Garden Exercise Program," "Bubble Bath Leads to Religious Conversion," and, finally, "Transformed Evil Genius Says 'Rub My Belly for Good Luck.'"

SAGITTARIUS (NOV. 22-DEC. 21): From what I can tell, the cosmos has decreed that your Official Metaphor for the rest of 1998 will be "fire in the earth." To honor this poetic challenge, I suggest you bring your flame-like lucidity to bear on densely materialistic issues. Here are some good questions to guide your work: 1) What can you truly claim as your own? 2) What do you mistakenly believe belongs to you? 3) Which possessions and attachments make you feel shiny and bright, and which smother and chill you? 4) Is there such a thing as an "inner" status symbol, and if so, how do you acquire it? 5) Can you infuse the dark places with your light without getting tainted by the murk and the gloom?

CAPRICORN (DEC. 22-JAN. 19): I'm looking at my copy of "The Goddess of the Zodiac," an astrological calendar put out by "SageWoman" magazine. Its entry for July 12, 1998 notes the following: "Chiron went direct in Scorpio yesterday and Juno entered Libra; the next few months are an auspicious time for healing sexual wounds in committed relationships." For your astrological information, Juno is an asteroid that rules partnerships; Chiron is an odd comet between Saturn and Uranus that stimulates radical healing. I agree with the calendar's assessment, and would add that this effect will be especially vivid for you Capricorns. Why? Because Mars (planet of animal energy) will be carrying on a highly animated dialogue with Venus (planet of irresistible attraction) in your Houses of Intimacy.

AQUARIUS (JAN. 20-FEB. 18): As you threaten to break all previous records for interesting, fumbles, stumbles, and bumbles, the pop-psychologist in me wants to cheer you on with one of my favorite 1-shirt quotes: "How can you learn from your mistakes unless you make a lot of really good ones?" Meanwhile, the sensitive dreamer in me wants to pump you up with a more lyrical quote from the poet Antonio Machado (translated by Robert Bly): "I dream... That I had a beehive inside my heart/And the golden bees/were making white comb and sweet honey/from all my old failures."

PISCES (FEB. 19-MARCH 20): At the risk of losing the "power" you get from being depressed, please write down descriptions of the five most pleasurable moments you've ever experienced. Then, during the coming week, keep these blissful memories close to the surface of your awareness. If you ever catch yourself slipping into a negative train of thought, interrupt it immediately and "comp" yourself to fantasize about those Big Five Ecstatic Epiphanies. I guarantee that if you do this, you'll stimulate or attract a new Ecstatic Epiphany that'll belong near the top of the list.

Home work: Tell what secret techniques you've discovered about feeding honey to crocodiles. Box 761, Petaluma, CA 94953 or www.realastrology.com

"Where do you want to eat?" "I don't know, where do you want to eat?" "I don't know. You choose." "I chose last time." "I don't know what I'm in the mood for." "Well, I don't know what I'm in the mood for either. Just choose someplace." "I don't know what there is." "How can you not know what there is?" "I just don't. I'll get the phone book." "No, not the phone book!"

Sound familiar? Research shows that the average diner spends one-third of meal time deliberating over where to eat out. One-third. Well, we feel that trying to decide at which restaurant to eat shouldn't be work — it should be fun, especially in an area like ours which offers so many different flavors to savor. That's why we've created the Casco Bay Weekly Dining Guide to help you chart out your culinary course through the vast array of restaurants in the Greater Portland area and beyond. From clam shack shore dinners to haute cuisine and everything in between, this dining guide provides quick and easy reference to some of the area's most popular restaurants, plus helps you get the most for your dining dollar.

INSIDE YOU'LL FIND:

- A HANDY INDEX OF RESTAURANTS THAT WILL DAZZLE YOUR PALATE
- A USEFUL MAP OF THE GREATER PORTLAND REGION
- SAMPLE MENUS • HELPFUL INFORMATION, AND SO MUCH MORE

Hang on to this guide and refer back to it. Keep one by the phone. Keep one in the car. Keep one at the office. (They're free, after all.) With our guide, you'll never have to waste time with that nagging, "Where do you want to eat?" question again.

When it comes to dining out, let the Casco Bay Weekly Dining Guide help you do the thinking. After all, life's too short.

Dear Loyal Customers,
It's been almost three years since we first opened our doors here at 14 York St. in Portland. We've come a long way from our shabby start with upscale Cajun cuisine (what were we thinking?!!) to our solid foundation as a great American cuisine restaurant featuring local specialties (lobster), and friendly service at a price that won't drive you to drink (drink anything except our very own brewed beers that is). I thank you for your continued patronage and hope that you will be with us through the millenium. For those who haven't been here, I invite you to try our restaurant and hope we can earn another customer for life. Stop in anytime, and I'll gladly hoist my mug.

Cheers,
Grant Wilson

TORTILLA FLAT

Dine at Tortilla Flat and step into old Mexico. The Spanish mission exterior belies the south of the border charms to be found within. Rough hewn beams, adobe walls and tile floors set the mood. The screened, open air deck is perfect for sipping margaritas on sultry summer evenings.

The extensive menu offers old favorites and new delights. Sizzling fajitas, chimichangas, burritos, tacos, enchiladas, combination plates and much more. The seafood specials are not to be missed, combining seafood with the flair of Mexican cuisine. For the less adventurous, standard American fare is also served. Families are welcome; a children's menu is available.

Tortilla Flat offers a full bar, with many exotic, fruity, frozen drink concoctions. A Chili Happy Hour is served from 4-7, Monday through Thursday. Prices are affordable, with lunch specials starting at $3.95. Great Mexican food is just moments away from downtown Portland, on the way to the White Mountains. 1871 Forest Ave. (Rte. 302) Portland 797-8729. Open 7 days a week.

So you want to own your own restaurant?

That was the caption on the cover of a New York Magazine article, along with a picture of an attractive young couple in their thirties sitting alone at one of their restaurant's elegantly dressed tables. The article reported the rate of restaurant failure at that time, 50 percent. And recent surveys put that figure at 80 percent. So where's the attraction?

"It certainly isn't all the dealings that go with code enforcement, city and state licensing bureaucracies, health, building, fire, and liquor inspectors, and high-cost equipment; commercial refrigeration, stoves, grills, fryers, griddles, slicers, toasters, and ice makers," says Barbara's Kitchen & Cafe owner and chef, Barbara Winthrop. "After that, there's staffing. Every business wants educated, intelligent, creative people with strong social graces who are responsible, committed, and energetic team players."

The restaurant business has a special need for these talents due to the intense stress, long hours, and positive customer relations. Yet, the industry has been known to have the highest turnover rate in the service sector.

"Most people who enter restaurant work are in transition," says Barbara. "The work appears easy, the money quick and lucrative, but the reality is a harsh contrast to these expectations."

Dealing with a perishable product, unlimited variables in food facts, as well as geographical tastes are just the beginning in designing a menu that will sell. And then there's the decor.

"If you think decorating your house or apartment is challenging, try a restaurant," says Barbara. "What image do you want to convey? How is it related to the community and type of food you serve? How much money do you have to spend on all those cobalt-blue platters or brass candelabras? How about just a simple chair with an understatement? How much will that cost? How many flea markets and antique shops are you prepared to explore? How many times do you go to Marden's or Macy's until there's the right sale? If you have five hundred thousand dollars, it's not a problem."

So, you want to own your own restaurant? Why?

"Maybe it's what drives everyone to do what is difficult: you simply love what you do," says Barbara. "You love the tastes, the smells, the colors and textures, and you love creating some magic with what's simply on the shelf or in the 'fridge."

"So the long hours, hard work, the endless turnover in staff, the high cost of utilities, the natural disasters that create shortages and drive up prices are issues you learn to live with," Barbara continues, "because there's always a chance it will get better. And it always does when you love what you do."

Barbara's Kitchen & Cafe is located at 388 Cottage Rd. in South Portland, across from the Portland Players Theatre, on the way to Portland Head Light and Fort Williams. Breakfast and lunch: Tuesday through Friday, 7-9; Saturday and Sunday, 8-2. Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, 5-10. Call 767-6313 or fax 799-5037.

Join us at Bintliff's American Cafe...

Bintliff's American Cafe features hearty American cuisine prepared by skilled chefs and served by professional waitstaff in a cozy, antique-filled atmosphere. Freshest local ingredients make up signature Benedicts, home simmered corned beef hash, "custom built" omelettes, gingerbread pancakes with lemon sauce, a variety of French toasts, quiches, wraps, crab and scallop bisque, turkey burgers, lobster ravioli, vegetarian dishes and much, much more. Portland's Only All-Day-Everyday-Brunch is served daily from 7:00 am - 2:00 pm on our outdoor deck and garden patio.

Dinner at Bintliff's American Cafe transforms the Greek revival building into an atmosphere of candlelight, classic jazz and generous portions of creative interpretations of everyone's favorites dishes. Filet Mignon Oscar, Jumbo Tiger Shrimp Primavera, Rack of Lamb Boursin, Salmon Florentine Vera Cruz, unique appetizers, salads, soups and ever-changing desserts, accompanied by a full bar, extensive beer and American wine list make dinner an event to remember. Reservations are accepted for dinner served from 5:30 pm - 9:00 pm on Friday and Saturday evenings only.
